#RacismNotWelcome

The City of Ryde has gone to great lengths to tackle racism in the community.

To continue these efforts, the City of Ryde has teamed up with Addison Road Community Organisation to install 42 #RacismNotWelcome signs across the local government area.

The first two of these anti-racism signs were installed in Eastwood town centre with the remainder to be rolled out in key locations.

Take part in the campaign by snapping a photo with the signs and posting it on social media with the hashtag #RacismNotWelcome

Together let's stamp out racism for good.

More trees for Ryde

The City of Ryde is planting an additional 657 new trees after securing funding through the NSW Government's Greening Our City grant program.

The trees are being planted in streets located between Coxs Road and Epping Road, North Ryde, with the work starting this month.

The $100,000 funding for the new trees was secured from the NSW Government after Council matched the grant funding dollar for dollar and committed to planting 615 trees in Ryde along Gardener Avenue, Boyce Street and surrounding streets earlier in the year.

The extensive tree planting program we have in place will help Council achieve its ultimate goal of increasing tree canopy by 40 percent by 2030.

Get vaccinated

The City of Ryde hit an important milestone last week with more than 80 percent of the population aged 15 and over having received at least one dose of the COVID-19 vaccine.

While this is encouraging, it still means there are thousands of eligible residents who are still at risk of becoming seriously ill because they are not vaccinated.

In addition, the NSW Government has made it clear that when restrictions start to lift next month, only those who are fully vaccinated will be able to enjoy the new freedoms.

So if you have not done so already, talk to a health professional about getting vaccinated today. For more information on how to book your vaccination and other resources, visit www.ryde.nsw.gov.au/vaxtothemax
